

THE NEW ENGLAND CLASSIC

SEPTEMBER 24, 2009

Serving students with chips and a pickle since 2007

VOLUME 3, ISSUE 1

SCORE. HE MADE A GOOD CHOICE.

Junior chooses his Bio lab partner based on hookup potential

In a shocking turn of events, sophomore Mack Harrington chose his Biology lab partner based on the likelihood that she would go down on him. While most people in the class tried to win over Tiffany Wen for the number one pick, Harrington does not care if his partner has any knowledge of the subject, other than anatomy.

Harrington spent drop/add period weighing the pros and cons of each girl.

“At first I was thinking Becky because she just broke up with her boyfriend, but I don’t want to deal with all that crazy. I could have chosen Stacy. She’s really hot. But she’s also bangin’ a football player. How can I compete with that?”

After a long internal debate, Harrington approached Kelly Gorin and asked her to be his lab partner. He said she was the best option because not only is she like an 8, but he also heard from Sean Trenton’s roommate that Gorin was “Eiffel Towered” in the kitchen of Mod 2A last week. Six hands were seen through the window.

Harrington’s friends warned him of the potential downfalls of his decision. A rejection of his advances may lead to very awkward future classes, especially if he misinterprets her asking him to inspect the slide of cellular cleavage. Harrington should have learned his lesson last year when he picked the girls for his intramural team based on the same qualifications and they finished dead last. ■

Species Profile: Migratory patterns of the BC freshman Male

For anyone with an interest in animal behavior, the first week of September in New England is one of great value, for it is a very important migratory period in the life of an incredible creature: the BC Freshman Male. This time of year marks the arrival of the BC Freshman (Homo Noobius Notwelcomeinmymodius) on the Boston College campus, where they embark on a long and hard journey towards maturation. To the delight of people-spotters everywhere, the breed is easy to identify, and their behavior is fascinating.

This wondrous creature journeys to Boston College at the end of August, typically guided by their ancestors during the arduous trip. Animal enthusiasts frequently spot them in the late morning on the east-bound Mass Pike in a station wagon with luggage and other random shit filling it to the brim. Many Freshmanologists, amateur and professional alike, have observed that during this stage the freshman facial expression reveals a sense of anticipation, likely due to their new instincts for alcoholism and hooking up which they are to hone in the coming years.

As if guided by a sixth sense, many of these BC Freshman Males choose to settle in a nesting ground referred to as “Upper Campus” by native students. Their parent figures often assist with the initial settling period, carrying bags and materials for the Freshman Male for their nesting purposes. Recent research has revealed that many BC Freshman Males have an innate drive to put a water bottle of Vodka in their suitcases before making their trip. Science has yet to reveal the explanation behind this behind this phenomenon, but several researchers have noted greater social success in males who have the gene for this strange instinct.

Soon after settling in the new nesting grounds, the BC Freshman Male forms clans and alliances with the peers who have settled with him. These clans are known to roam aimlessly around Chestnut Hill for months at a time in a brutal survival game, as they hunt for food, females and intoxicating chemicals, all of which they will fight for until asked to leave whatever dorm they managed to get into. Status is important amongst the Freshman Males, as it can bring advantages in future years when they have settled far from their original grounds. During this roaming period the Freshman Male can be identified by their calls such as, “Hey girls, where you going!?” or, “I can’t believe I’m sober right now!”

Science has only just begun to reveal the mysterious secrets of the BC Freshman Male, an animal which formerly was only studied in the most arcane fringes of zoology in centuries past. Now a well-respected field, Freshmanology is gaining enthusiasts by the day, many of whom indeed travel to Chestnut Hill to observe the annual migratory movements of the beautiful and misunderstood beast. Those who are unfortunate enough to have missed the period this year can take comfort knowing next year will yield a new flock of fledgling eagles. ■

Baldwin airlifts drunk skank to safety

Fitzshawga residents were stunned last Thursday night after receiving an unexpected visit from their very own Eagles mascot, who is being widely lauded for saving the day. According to an anonymous eyewitness, freshman Jillian McChillian was tossing a stomach full of McElroy chicken tenders and Raspberry Rubinoff all over the O'Connell House wheelchair ramp at approximately 11:45 PM. Prior to this, several students reported that she had made out with 12 dudes on the first floor of Fitzpatrick Hall, took 15 shots and chugged a half-gallon of table wine.

Sergeant Terry O'Reilly of the Boston College Police Department arrived on the scene at approximately 11:52 PM on a routine patrol of Upper Campus.

"This broad was so drunk," Sergeant O'Reilly said. "BC police officers are trained extensively to handle Sloppy Skanks and the occasional Blackout Bitch, but this girl was bordering on being a Passed-Out Slut. We are obligated to call Baldwin when students enter this stage of intoxication."

Upon arriving at the scene, Baldwin checked the girl for signs of alcohol poisoning, determining that she was no longer in the Topsy Harlot stage of poisoning and had entered the Passed-Out Slut stage, requiring emergency treatment. He immediately airlifted her to St. Elizabeth's hospital, holding her barely-there dress in his fierce Jesuit talons. She was treated for McElroy ingestion and was offered a pair of pants.

A well-kept secret in the Eagle Transport system, Baldwin has a specialized ER certification from the Connell School of Nursing and has been in service since BC's founding. Baldwin the Eagle, S.J., was born in a box on top of Gasson Hall after a local female eagle was cross-bred with a griffin in a sick experiment by members of the Sociology department. He is often seen at BC sporting events and offers his emergency services on weekend nights.

Baldwin was reached for comment, stating, "Hey fellow Eagle students! What happened last night was fucking crazy! That girl was dangerously drunk! She's going to need to do thirty Hail Mary's when she gets out of a coma to ever be welcome on my campus again!"

Baldwin is not an official spokesperson of the Boston College administration. In the meantime, students all over campus can rest easy knowing that an anthropomorphic eagle is flying around campus rescuing the thirsty floozies of our fair, noble community. ■

Plans for freshman dorm renovation fall through

This week findings from a BC-commissioned study on freshman accommodations were published suggesting that the forced triple be expanded to a forced quattuorvigenuple as a solution for the over-sized Class of 2013. Structured like the interior of a Russian nuclear sub, the new room layout boasts a cozy twenty-four bed space consisting of four bunks stacked against each wall and eight hammocks suspended from the ceiling, all situated in the traditional double-sized dorm. Asked why they didn't utilize the floor space, ResLife responded that they "had no intention of breaking the fire code."

The designers of the room were purportedly torn between stacking three or four beds between floor and ceiling. Dr. Hans Schnekler, head of the team, determined that "the clearance between beds could make recreational activity between students impossible," prompting the Jesuit institution to choose the four-bed set-up. Upon being made cognizant of BC's 'No Fat Chicks' policy, Dr. Schnekler conceded to adding another bunk.

The administration is reportedly pleased at the prospect of phasing out inefficient dorms that fail to make use of their full storage potential. With the current equipment, a double can only be stretched to hold three beds, while the new layout will comfortably sleep two dozen college students, plus that kid who told you he lived on Newton but is actually a junior at BC High.

Asked how he felt about not having a desk or closet, Kostka resident Jacob Myers responded, "Man, I've got mixed feelings. There isn't a spot for me to put my flat screen or the XBOX; but on the other hand, we've got space for another minifridge." ■

JUST LIKE IN SHAWSHANK REDEMPTION

Obituaries

Agora

Agora, the beloved BC dot edu website, died at the age of 12. Agora truly followed the Jesuit tradition of being one for others and dedicated his life to providing people with the services they need, from "My Bill" to "Eagle One Card - Add Funds." He was predeceased by his husband, WebCT, in 2007. He is survived by his sister, Portal, and their 9,000 undergraduate students.

The Magician's Club

Born to two foreign exchange students from New Zealand in 2007, the Magician's Club died last Friday afternoon when no one showed up to recruit new members on Student Activities Day. The club's only member throughout the 2008-2009 school year, Patrick Bonseñore, graduated this May leaving the club to die in the Dust-bowl cold, loveless and alone.

Samuel W. Francis

Inventor of the spork, for which he was issued US Patent 147,119 in February 1874. He was wounded by a knife wielded by Frank Emmenegger, creator of US Patent 1,044,869, "spoon with a tined edge." He died last Thursday from his wounds. He is survived by school cafeterias everywhere, except those at BC, which have deemed the spork blasphemous.

Orientation Leader Application Form Please return to First Year Experience

Circle the answer you feel applies most to you. Remember, there are no wrong answers, only wrong religions.

1. Please describe your ethnicity:

- A. White and neurotic
- B. AHANA with pizzazz
- C. White with pizzazz
- D. AHANA and neurotic

If none of these categories apply to you, please dispose of this application immediately.

2. Would you call the club that you are president of:

- A. UGBC
- B. A very important club on campus
- C. Campus clubs take time away from my Xbox

3. What is your excitement level?

- A. Ellen DeGeneres on 50 mg of speed
- B. Ashley Olsen after 3 lines of blow off an NYC toilet
- C. Eeyore after 12 days in an opium den

4. Have you ever been intoxicated within 20 nautical miles of Boston College campus (not including St. Mary's Chapel or Keyes South)?

- A. NEVER
- B. No.
- C. I'd circle this one if I hadn't spilled Wild Turkey all over this application

5. Are you an unsightly person?

- A. No, my young, supple Catholic body is in perfect condition.
- B. What matters is on the inside
- C. I have the ideal face for radio

6. Where do you keep your updated résumé when you sleep?

- A. Under my pillow
- B. My undergarments
- C. Next to my bong

This question for male applicants only:

7a. Have you ever lusted after an 18 year-old blonde, fresh out of high school, in the middle of the sweltering summer?

- A. No
- B. I'm a eunuch
- C. Is a frog's asshole watertight?

This question for female applicants only:

7b. Are you sexually promiscuous?

- A. God told me that my body is a temple
- B. Does anal count?
- C. I've been too busy climbing poles to the top of UGBC

8. Boston College's alcohol policy should be drier than:

- A. Saudi Arabia
- B. An OL skit
- C. Queen Elizabeth's snatch

9. Would you be willing to get paid by freshmen to annoy them for three days?

- A. WE ARE BC!!!
- B. EAGLES ON THE WARPATH...OO...AHHH!
- C. If the girls are hot, sure

10. Can you break more ice than an Arctic oil tanker?

- A. Let's play the name game!
- B. Tell me two truths and a lie
- C. Do you wipe your ass with folds or scrunchers?

The last Kanye West/Taylor Swift article you'll ever need to read

If you haven't heard of the "Kanye-West-Taylor-Swift-VMA-Confrontation" then here's my advice for you: pack up your yoga mat, get out of your grandmother's basement, move to Sri Lanka, become a cattle herder, and change your name to Henry David Thoreau. But for those of you who have, let me break something to you: Kanye West was NOT in the wrong.

In fact, fellow rapper Jay-Z explained it best, "He [Kanye] didn't kill anybody." How can you argue with that logic? Exactly. You can't. I can list an array of things that Kanye didn't do, including "getting his tongue nearly bitten off by a hooker when trying to French kiss her" (sorry ShamWow! guy, low blow, but hey at least we know one thing a ShamWow! won't clean: a tarnished pride).

So then what did Kanye do? I'll tell you. He simply pretended for a moment to be Sarah Palin during the VP debate of '08 by giving a shout-out to his kids' school (or in his case, his best bud's woman.) Just watch what happens when we break the whole incident down line by line, shall we?:

"Yo Taylor, I'm really happy for you..."

How. Thoughtful. Is. He. How else is someone like Kanye West supposed to congratulate a huge country star? Just call her and say "congratulations on your win"? With an impersonal FB message? Ha, right.

"...I'mma let you finish..."

Is it really stealing if he gives you give it back?

"...but Beyoncé had one of the best videos of all-time!"

This is where Kanye got moderately a little mixed up. He got has Beyoncé's "Single Ladies" confused with the "Single Ladies" video he saw earlier on eHarmony.com. I mean how else is he supposed to get rid of that tranny-gerbil of a girlfriend he has now if he doesn't test the waters, right?

So if this doesn't convince you that Kanye West is in fact as wonderful as he says he is, let me send you off with this: what had a bigger cult-following among 13-year old, middle class white girls who watch MTV? Kanye West's "Gold Digger" or Taylor Swift's "You Belong With Me"? ■

TOP 10 SIGNS THAT YOU'RE A... FRESHMAN

1. it's the first year at the university you attend

2. you live on upper or newton

3. you're not a sophomore, junior, or senior

4. on your id card the year of graduation is four years from now

5. you graduated from high school last year

6. your roommate is entering his first year of college and you're doing the same

7. you had freshman orientation over the summer

8. when your parents call, they ask how their "favorite freshman" is doing

9. "honoring the legacy - pursuing greatness" is on the back of your superfan shirt

10. trays

Support for Tamarind still as fiery as curry chicken

The student run eco-friendly groups on campus, as well as the BC administration, are rightfully ecstatic with the amazing turnout Addie's Café has continued to elicit from students. However, some were startled to discover that not all students are as pleased with Addie's as dining services would have us believe.

Senior Chet Calo personally identifies himself as the unyielding leader of the Addie's opposition. Not a newcomer to the BC protest scene, Calo has been seen making signs supporting the reinstallation of the Eagle's Nest classic "In a Jam," attending neighborhood meetings in support of the "planet" Pluto, and twittering about the loss of Circle Theater.

"I'm not doing this just for me and my love of Green Curry Rice Bowls." Calo zealously explained. "This protest is in support of all the small, local eateries with questionable ingredients that are being run out of business by fresh vegetables and cheeses! What people don't seem to understand is that the dining experience is more important than fresh arugula served with a quaint personal pizza."

While Calo hopes to gain notoriety for his cause, his supporters are gradually diminishing. His most recent set back came when his campaign manager junior Luke Ridge was lured away with the promise of nicely tossed salads and Italian soda.

Calo plans on meeting with members of GJP later this month to discuss tactical options. ■

J-Crew announces new line of Superfan cardigans

To commemorate the off-the record bailout dollars Boston College provided to the iconic retail store during the 2008 economic tantrum, J-Crew announces they will produce Superfan cardigans in honor of the standard BC uniform item.

To further demonstrate their gratitude for BC's extensive patronage, J-Crew will provide Baldwin with a new outfit "that's refined yet playful with a lot of attitude." Conceptual sketches pivot around a more polished look which includes sunwashed Nantucket red chino shorts, luxe thermal henleys for more nippy conditions, critter wellies and a polo with "Go Eagles!" displayed on the back of the collar whence popped. Baldwin's new accessories will include a cup of choc/vanil fro-yo twist and an iPhone.

Resident fashion experts rave that the women's cardigan and coordinated jersey scarf serves as a staple combination of day-to-night wear and supplies a pop of color to any outfit. Likewise the men's cardigan lessens one's appearance of drunkenness and stands out as the most spirited way to bundle up for that off-campus shindig. J-Crew liaisons say their eagle-inspired accessories will make one appear all the more glamorous for that 20-foot cab ride to Foster.

Banana Republic and Ralph Lauren are preparing to get in on the new marketing opportunities given the projected success of J-Crew's new collegiate sponsorship. ■

Area man gets over twenty right in a row on Jeopardy

James Wentworth wants the world to know of his genius. Last Wednesday, Mr. Wentworth returned to his dorm room to enjoy a late afternoon apple juice and watch that day's episode of Jeopardy. But this Wednesday was unlike any other in Mr. Wentworth's tenure as Jeopardy viewer and frequent shouter-out-of-answers.

"I was on fire that day. Who is LBJ? BINGO! What is I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings? Suck that Trebek," said Mr. Wentworth while recounting his story. According to James Wentworth, he answered a staggering 23 questions correctly.

Unfortunately, not a single person was around to witness Mr. Wentworth's greatest life achievement to date and so his claims are in refute. He has since setup a webcam where any interested parties can log in and watch him watching Jeopardy each and every weekday afternoon. ■

Peeping Tom creeps the off-campus scene

Brighton-Allston Police have issued a warning to the Brighton community after receiving several reports of a potential "Peeping Tom" from residents in the area. A portly Caucasian man of unknown origin allegedly named Jeeves Stopfunnery has been reported to be driving around a large SUV on weekend nights and committing privacy crimes.

Resident complaints cite that he often parks in front of homes known to be occupied by young Men and Women for Others and stares into their windows. His motivation is unknown, but some fear that it is of a sexual nature. Several neighborhood locals suspect it may be a Boston College employee who stalks around in the red Ford Explorer invading people's privacy. These suspicions have thus far been unfounded. This man has been seen fraternizing with the likes of Raul Kebator.

Many believe he makes his living breaking and entering while others assume he does this to avoid sex with his wife. BC officials have declined to comment officially on the matter, only directing NEC reporters to the ODSD website, which immediately redirected to Tubgirl. NEC reporters asked neighborhood residents if they had any comments on the BC "Community Liaison." One resident stated, "O, the bane of my existence, you mean? Between you and me, I keyed his car yesterday."

Police encourage anyone who has noticed suspicious activity to immediately call 911 and report the sighting, although they will only pretend to listen to it. ■

Like what you see?

(absolutely you do...)

Join the Classic--

We are looking for anyone who is funny/creative/interesting/good looking ... no experience necessary

E-mail: thenewenglandclassic@gmail.com

Please recycle me!

© 2009