LTE: Okay, This Really Isn't Funny Anymore

American voters: Almost 6 months ago, I, Donald J. Trump, announced that I would be running for President of the United States. After countless speeches, long debates, and near constant dealing with the press, I've gone from being mocked as a novelty candidate, to being the current frontrunner in one of America's two major political parties. And that is why, America, I'm here to tell you that this isn't funny anymore. I know this was funny at first, but after a certain point jokes get played out, and a premise can become stale. To be honest, I never thought that this would go any further than my announcement to run. I mean, for fuck's sake, I called all Mexicans rapists and spent a good part of the speech talking about my own wealth. But you, the American voters, seemed willing to play along and I thought, "Hey, it'd be pretty goddamn hilarious to take this thing a little further."

But I'm telling you all now that this has gone on long enough. I know we've all loved tuning in each week to see what wacky things I'm gonna say next, and some of your ignorant friends from high school even think I'm the right choice for the future of this country. But at this point, I'm finding it harder and harder to keep the premise going. I mean, I thought my proposal to essentially repeal the First Amendment for Muslims by monitoring mosques would be enough to show you people that I've run out of ideas, but you people ate it right up. Then I went even further and said I was going to make all Muslims wear identifying badges. You'd think that that'd be enough for people to say I've "jumped the shark," but you'd be wrong. Oh, and if that sounds familiar, it's because I stole the whole idea.

SERIOUSLY GUYS, THIS NEEDS TO STOP. NOW.

From Hitler. I literally stole the whole idea from Adolf Hitler. I just changed "Jews" to "Muslims." And again, you ate it all up.

But even now, after abandoning all reason, and plagiarizing another's work, you people still aren't done with me. I know it's hard to let a good joke die, but if you don't, its how a good joke becomes a bad one. Sure it was funny to see me, a power-drunk billionaire with racist ideas and too much time on his hands, run for president. And it was even funnier when I started to do well. But to see me win? If that happens, you're fired, America. 📖

-Sincerely,
Donald J. Trump

O'Neill Library Diagnosed With Lung Cancer

ST. ELIZABETH'S HOSPITAL—Tragedy struck the Boston College community earlier this week when O'Neill Library, 31, was diagnosed with lung cancer. Doctors are almost certain that the cause of this disease was secondhand smoke from students who enjoy taking a study break with a cigarette or vaporizer just outside the library's doors.

Several students reported that their hearts ached when hearing the news, "even though it's a pretty beat-ass building." While the likelihood of O'Neill's survival is uncertain as of press time, student activists have banded together to raise money for its treatment. These students have been periodically sitting outside O'Neill at a table swiping meal plan money, asking passersby to "cough up the cash for lung cancer," but nearly all students are ignoring their requests as if they were just a service trip group.

Of all students on the Heights, pre-med Freshman McKayla Applebee appears to be the most taken aback: "I don't think you understand how much O'Neill and I have been through together," said Applebee through a river of tears. "In my mere four months on this campus, I've spent no less than four hours a day in this building of academia slaving over chemistry. Within its brutalist walls, I've contemplated life, death, and the futility of man's endless pursuit of knowledge."

OUR THOUGHTS AND PRAYERS ARE WITH O'NEILL

Meanwhile, except for a urinary tract infection that manifests itself in the godawful basement coffee vending machine, Bapst Art Library remains in perfect health. 📖

Lonely Freshman Fantasizing About Being Finals Petting Zoo Goat

CHESTNUT HILL—After hearing about what “goes down” in Gonzaga Hall and other freshman dormitories before finals each semester, Jack McCain (MCAS '19) reportedly cannot stop fantasizing about transforming into an adorable baby goat in the finals week petting zoo on Upper Campus.

I'M GOING TO #KILL THE PETTING ZOO INSTAGRAM GAME

When asked why a goat specifically, McCain claimed that baby goats get the most cuddles from freshman girls, and they get to wear diapers. But, most importantly, he's guessing that Bella from his Courage to Know class is “definitely” going to Instagram herself with one of the goats.

“Oh, the things I would do to be that little ball of fur cuddled against her North Face!” exclaimed a doe-eyed McCain. “She's said no to coffee at the Chocolate Bar 5 times, but joke's on her!”

At press time, McCain was “baa”-ing himself to sleep in preparation for his big opportunity. 📖

History Professor Unsure if Johnny Appleseed Was Real

GASSON HALL—In “one of the most embarrassing moments” of her career, Dr. Colleen Andrews, Professor of American History at Boston College, was unable to remember whether or not Johnny Appleseed was real.

“One of my students just straight-up asked me during the middle of class,” said the tenured professor, who earned a PhD. in American History from Columbia University in 2001, “and I just completely blanked. I've never felt so embarrassed in my entire life!”

In an attempt to save face, the published author and leading authority on Pre-Civil War America rambled for some time about “the complexities of historical research.” When her non-response failed to placate the student's curiosity, she angrily dismissed her class, whom she referred to as “nosy, little shits.”

Andrews spent the remainder of her day desperately trying to recall whether or not Johnny Appleseed, a historically real person about whom much is known, actually existed. “Until today I never bothered to wonder if he was real. I always assumed he was just something you tell kids about, like Santa Claus, or God,” said the self-described “expert” in American history. Unable to recall from memory, Andrews finally turned to the internet, where she discovered the semi-legendary figure, whom she had not heard about or mentioned since the first grade, did in fact exist. Unfortunately for Andrews, the damage to her self esteem had been done.

At press time, Andrews was staring angrily at her computer screen, before muttering “bullshit” and storming out of her office. 📖

2016 RA Application

This is the ResLife's application to be an RA for the 2016-2017 school year. Don't stress. Remember: There are no wrong answers, only wrong religions.

How does having free housing and a meal plan sound?

- A. Pretty good
- B. Does it cover El Pelon or nah?
- C. I get the majority of my sustenance from beer

What would you use a single for?

- A. The Ignatian tradition of self-examination and reflection
- B. Nude yodeling, yoga, and YMCA-ing
- C. Unsolicited weed smoking & porn watching

What scent of candle did you get your mom for Mother's Day?

- A. Lavender
- B. Mint
- C. None — There are no candles allowed in my home. ResLifes' rules should be abided by everyone everywhere.

Boston College's campus should be drier than:

- A. California
- B. A professor's jokes
- C. Queen Elizabeth's snatch

What's your average Friday night?

- A. Laying down the fucking law for ResLife
- B. Fun, alternative events that don't require binge-drinking to compensate for a lack of social skills and self-esteem
- C. Binge-drinking in an off-campus basement to compensate for a lack of social skills and self-esteem

Sophomore Accidentally Launches Nuclear Strike on Russia with UIS

ACCESS IS LIMITED TO AUTHORIZED PERSONNEL

PLEASE REMEMBER:
SECURITY IS EVERYONE'S BUSINESS

I ALWAYS WONDERED WHY THEY WERE SO SERIOUS ABOUT THIS...

NATO HQ, BRUSSELS—Innocently attempting to sign up for next semester's classes on UIS early Friday morning, sophomore Harry Wood managed to quite literally set the world aflame when he accidentally launched 24 Trident Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles towards targets in Russia from a US Navy Ohio-class submarine stationed off the coast of Syria.

"I was pressing a lot of buttons frantically because I heard US Foreign Policy II with Jacobs was close to filling up," said Wood. "And all of a sudden, UIS was asking me if I wanted to 'nuke those commie bastards.' Since I knew the class had a lot to do with the Cold War, I figured I would just hit 'Enter,' and all of the sudden UIS congratulated me on my 'glorious victory.'"

The program activated by Wood during his reckless registration was initially crafted for the US government during the height of the Cold War, when UIS was a critical component of the North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD) network. Naturally, nuclear weapons could be launched with the input of a few launch codes into the program.

At press time, while Wood did eventually enroll in Jacob's class, he unfortunately now has the weight of the three million Russian lives he accidentally took on his conscience.

Help! Because of a tax-evasion charge from the IRS, Father Leahy lost over $1B! Help him navigate the maze of red tape to get the money back from the goddamn gov'ment!

LudaChrist To Headline Annual Jesuit Throwdown

CHESTNUT HILL—As finals finish up, Resident Ministers anxiously wait for students to leave campus so that they can host the Annual Jesuit Throwdown, or Godstock, as it is endearingly known by the BC Jesuit community. Famed Christian rapper LudaChrist will be headlining this year, the biggest artist to be featured in the annual concert since Madonna's performance in 1989.

"These kids need to just get on home to the Dirty Jerz or Worcester or wherever the hell they're from and let us have a good time once and for all," said Fr. Al Danktree while taking a 5 minute break from giving annual pre-exams last rites. "We even managed to clean out the wine racks at Res Liquors for the show's booze supply!"

Tickets for Godstock go on sale tomorrow at the Robsham box office, but, considering the caliber of the headliner for this year's show, tickets are expected to sell out "faster than something actually edible at Lower," remarked Father Danktree.

"I'm pulling an all-nighter in front of Robsham so that I can be the first in line at 6AM," said BC's beloved Fr. Mike Drop. "I might even load up on extra tickets and scalp 'em online afterwards! Getting dat cash money mayne."

Adhering to the Jesuit value of being men for others, the Jesuits have also extended invites to other individuals left on campus over break, as well as those who can't normally be seen "throwing down" on campus. The Kirkwood Tickler and the Stokes

Arsonist have already RSVP'd to this year's festivities and, as usual, the Jesuits hope that the Spirit of St. Ignatius will finally accept their invitation. The BC Men's Hockey Team, BCPD, and a group of random international students from Sri Lanka will also be attending.

"It's kind of sad that the Jesuits can pull a better headliner for a concert than UGBC," said Johnny Goodkush, of the BC Men's Hockey Team, who will be attending. "Puck you, UGBC. Pucking pathetic." 📖

WHO'S A HO?

Edmond's Resident Elects to Live in Unfinished New Dorm

EDMOND'S HALL—After months of envying the future Boston College classes that will be able to live in the marvelous unnamed dorm still under construction at 2150 Commonwealth Avenue, Margie McKnight (MCAS '16) decided she had enough of living in Edmond's Hall.

McKnight put up with the leaky garbage disposal, faulty lights, broken outlets, and lack of breathable air in her four-man apartment in Edmond's, but it was the eerie green mold and ghostly wailing throughout the Warsaw Pact-era apartment building that finally convinced her to leave. Last week, she announced her intentions to move into the partially constructed and so-far unnamed residence hall.

McKnight, though incredibly brave, has received scrutiny for her proposed move into a dorm that lacks heating, lighting, running water, her bestie Katie, and the name of an old white guy who donated the cash to build it gracing the entranceway (TAKE THE HINT, PROSPECTIVE DONORS!).

"Yeah it'll be tough, but hell you've all heard me complain a million times on Snapchat that anything is better than Edmond's, so I think I'll survive," remarked McKnight with a smirk. "I've got everything a girl needs to survive in that harsh environment! My hair straightener, a 12-pack of Redd's Wicked Apple Ale™, tons of Crest White Strips, and Stefan, my vibrator!"

When pressed for comment, the Office of Residential Life quickly insisted that "under no circumstances" would McKnight be allowed to move into the incomplete dorm. "We make the rules 'round these parts," said a high-ranking ResLife employee while twirling a pearl-handled revolver and packing a fat lip of fresh chewing tobacco. 📖

"WE DON'T CARE THAT THE CONCRETE FLOORS IN THE NEW DORM ARE MORE COMFY THAN YOUR BED, YOU CAN'T LIVE IN THERE!"

Did we interrupt your studying? Good. Enjoy your F in Philosophy. You should've started studying earlier, not our fault you're lazy.
