BC Defends Koch Donation: “We Only Take It Once A Year”

MCGUINN HALL — In the face of student and faculty criticism, the Boston College administration has redoubled its defense of the recent Koch Foundation to the Political Science department, maintaining they only take one Koch donation per year.

“Shut the fuck up, narcs,” said university spokesperson Jack Dunn in a press conference. “It’s not like we’re addicted or anything, God.”

Tax filings show that BC has accepted one dose of Koch every year since 2015, in slightly varying amounts. This year’s gift is reportedly much larger than in years past, but “nothing a true Eagle can’t handle,” according to foundation president Charles Koch.

Concerned members of the BC community oppose this year’s donation, holding an intervention on O’Neill Plaza in November.

“You take it one time at a party and think it’s fine, a one time thing,” said Cole Skasch (MCAS ‘21). “Next thing you know, you become dependent... you can’t do anything without a donation.”

In past years, the university has taken its annual donation with little pushback from the student body. After relatively small bumps from 2015 to 2017, the administration railed $27,000 worth of Koch last year.

However, this latest donation was written off as a drunken mistake, hopefully not habit-forming.

After staying clean for the year following the 2018 bender, Boston College administrators are reportedly considering taking Koch again, this time as part of a proposed political science program.

Although some faculty in the department have pussied out, a solid group remains that would “definitely be down” if the donation does come through.

“It’s not like we’re talking about taking money from Jeff Benzos or someone dangerous like that,” Dunn said. “We make sure to test our shit before we start using or distributing it. The Poli Sci guys are just being paranoid.”

A group of straight-edge professors from across several departments, the Faculty Against Dust, published a statement condemning this year’s pending donation in November.

“Koch has been linked to climate change denial, influencing American foreign policy, and irreversible liver damage,” said FAD organizer and Associate Perspectives Professor Nora Cottic. “It’s a slippery, snowy slope if you aren’t careful — and we all know that Boston College has a history of donation abuse.”

A final decision regarding the donation is expected by the start of spring semester, unless the administration decides to take it on New Year’s Eve.

At press time, Father Leahy was seen asking anyone not under a vow of poverty to borrow a single dollar bill.

Steve Addazio Accepts Full-Time Offer At Deloitte, Looking Forward To New Chapter

BOSTON COLLEGE CAREER CENTER — Former head football coach Steve Addazio has accepted a full-time offer at Deloitte, according to sources close to the Addazio family.

“I’m so excited to embark on the next part of my journey with the dudes over at Deloitte,” Addazio said in a LinkedIn post Monday. “Huge thanks to Skizz Blomfort, Dame Lomitrin, Dennis, and all the other guys who’ve helped me through this recruiting process.”

The post was accompanied by a blurry photo of Addazio in business formal in front of what appeared to be Gasson. The image was too low quality for publication.

“Steve seems like a great guy — a dude, even — and we believe he’s going to fit in really well with the corporate culture here at Deloitte,” hiring manager Rich Whiteman told The Classic in an email. “He’s spent three more years at BC than the average graduate, and he’s shown moderate success in high-pressure situations. That’s what we need in our financial consultants.”

Records obtained from Deloitte human resources director and former BC running back Morrie Monet (CSOM ‘04) show that Addazio applied for the position through Indeed.com just two days after the news of his release. Sources from within Boston College Athletics noted that Addazio was relieved to receive the offer after being turned down by PwC, KPMG, and 4Boston.

“I’m just glad he found a job so quickly after being fir— I mean, after graduating,” Kathleen Donoghue, Addazio’s wife, said. “I mean, I love Steve, but I can’t have him just laying around the house. He needs structure.”

Addazio is set to make around $82,000 in his first year as a financial consultant. It’s a significant pay cut after making $2.5 million per year as BC’s highest-paid employee since 2012, but the Addazio family is hopeful this position will lead to management opportunities in the future.

At press time, Addazio was seen browsing Craigslist for apartments in Detroit. “Deloitte, Detroit, right? I’m just assuming that’s where the office is, otherwise why would they call it that?”

Report: 50% Of Well-Endowed Scholars Program 'Huge Dicks'

FULTON HALL — Exactly half of Boston College's Well-Endowed Scholars Program are a group of huge dicks, according to a newly released report.

The program, run out of the Office of University Enlargement, was founded by Big John in 1969. Over the years, it has gained a reputation for being exclusive regarding its members' membership. The administration lauds the WESP, often thanking them for carrying their generous gifts around campus every day.

"I'm a grower, not a shower," Little yelled at The Classic, unsolicited. "C'mon, it's fucking freezing out here — who isn't a little shriveled right now?"

The underdeveloped freshman is often seen driving a raised white Jeep, doors off and top down, even in the December cold.

His car has extra lights above the windshield, and a sealed bottle of lube in the glove compartment.

"I had no problem with the girls in the program, but the guys were just so fucking rude to me," said Little. "They spent the entire time reminding them that they were in charge, and they all belittled me for being 5-foot-4."

Although program leaders maintain the selection process is equal for men and women, there have been rumors that admission for women is much more upfront than for male applicants.

"With women, you can usually tell — they kinda tend to slap you in the face with it," program director Lars Crotum. "With men, it's a bit harder. It takes a little more stripping down to see if their manhood rises to the occasion."

At press time, female applicants were seen adjusting their assets in a Fulton bathroom before the second-round interviews.

BC Almost Finished Construction Of Big Pile Of Dirt

LOWER CAMPUS — After a long semester of hard work and loud construction, Boston College is finally nearing completion on its newest project for lower campus: a giant pile of dirt.

While rumors have circulated all semester that the open space will be used for something like a student center, outdoor tennis and basketball courts, or green space, any student passing by the former site of the Plex can clearly see that the end goal is to replace the gym with a huge dirt mountain.

"I used to think I wanted the Plex to be replaced by a new dorm, so that there would be more space on campus to move freshmen off Newton," said Art Katekt (MCAS '23).

"But boy was I wrong! I can't imagine anything else being there now besides a heap of earth. O mountain of soil, how majestic and beautiful you are!"

The director of the new construction project, Doug Ground, commented on how he has led the undertaking so far.

"So, the way it works is that all of the dirt used to be in the earth," said Ground. "But what we have spent the semester doing is digging up all the dirt with our construction equipment and making it into a cool giant pile."

At press time, Boston College was unveiling its new 5-year plan to turn Brighton Campus into a giant blanket fort.

OPINION: Can I Go Home Now?

By Molly the Dog

Let me begin by acknowledging my privilege upfront. I know I lead a cushy life — basically all I do every day is run around the third-most-Instagrammed college campus in the country on my huge, adorable paws, being pet by dozens if not hundreds of affection-starved students. I know there are dogs just like me shivering in the snow on the streets right now. Although I'm probably cuter — you don't usually see golden retriever puppies with matted fur eating trash.

But I would like to go home soon. I feel like I've been here my whole life. Granted, I'm less than two months old, but time is relative and spending three hours a day wandering around obsessively groomed lawns while my owner talks to 18- and 19-year-old girls is getting kind of old. I want to go home, where there's a heater (I'm getting over the noise!) and food and toys. Right now, I feel like I'm the toy. Doesn't this school pay for therapy dogs? I'm doing this shit for free — and out in the cold, no less.

Speaking of therapy, I'm beginning to be genuinely concerned with the state of the Boston College student body. The way they coo and huddle around me, desperate for one stroke of my luscious golden fur makes it seem like none of them have touched another living thing in months, maybe years. They have deep dark circles under their eyes, and their voices go way too high when they call my name, trying to get me to look at them for the perfect Instagram story shot. It's sad, really. I do my best to appease them, to play the part of loving plaything and fill the void left by their childhood pets, but really I just want to go home. Besides, these kids need real therapy, not dogs.

One last note concerning the Instagram page that has been created in my name. I do not speak like that. To suggest that I have a working knowledge of English words yet have somehow avoided picking up any semblance of syntax is an insult not only to me, but to dogs everywhere. We have been infantilized long enough.

P.S. I do not want to be your mascot. The Eagle Man... he pleases me. Let him stay.

Hey Siri

Disembodied advice from a disembodied voice.

Hey Siri! My roommate and my boyfriend keep hanging out without me in the room with the door locked, and I always find crumpled up, used balloons after. How do I tell them I know about the surprise party they're planning for my birthday?

A: Use blood (real is preferable, but fake will do in a pinch) to spell out 'I KNOW WHAT YOU DID' on the wall above your roommate's bed. This will clue them in that you're really grateful for both of them (blood=heart=love) :)

Hey Siri! My professor keeps asking for pictures of my feet for extra credit on my test, what's the best angle to take them from?

A: The general rule is that you have to have as many socks as you have toes, so if you have ten toes, ten pairs of socks, and so on. The best angles are usually from below, but the important part is that your professor will be impressed by how bulky and sexy your cute little trotters look.

Hey Siri! This girl I've been seeing says she wants to take things to the next level, but I already live on the 6th floor of Vandy. What should I do?

A: This can be a confusing question, but what it really means is that she wants a joint bank account. Believe me, there is NOTHING (and I do mean nothing) hotter than a shared Venmo.

NCAA Rules Student Athletes Can Be Paid In Kohl's Cash

YAWKEY ATHLETICS CENTER — After months of controversy over the payment of student athletes, NCAA President Mark Emmert announced that players may be compensated in Kohl's Cash, effective immediately.

The compromise was met with mixed reactions from the public. Some complained that although the plan addresses the fact that student athletes can be compensated for their likeness, it uses a currency useless anywhere besides at budget retailer Kohl's. Others took issue specifically with the selection of Kohl's.

"If the NCAA decided on using a retail coupon program for compensation, I don't understand why they wouldn't go with Hot Topic," said Division I athlete Skrillex V. Deathblade. "They're offering $15 Hot Cash for every qualifying purchase of $30 or more until mid-January."

Despite widespread public dissent, Emmert defended the NCAA's decision to use Kohl's Cash, arguing that it offers benefits that traditional cash does not.

"For example, Kohl's Cash can still be redeemed 10 days after its expiration date," Emmert said. "As far as I know, the same can't be said for normal money."

"Yeah, I think this is a great plan," added Joe Kohl. "We hope to see the general public transition entirely to Kohl's Cash by 2026, and this is a step in the right direction."

At press time, Heisman frontrunner Joe Burrow was seen entering his dorm room with a new Sonoma Goods for Life Cameron Coffee Table, a Tribeca Living Valencia Solid Duvet in Dark Beige, and a Homedics Shiatsu Elite Foot Massager with Heat.
